History of the Indiana Athletic Trainers' Association

The Indiana Athletic Trainers' Association (IATA) is a professional association for athletic trainers of Indiana, providing advocacy, education, networking opportunities, and innovative resources. In the early 1980s, many Certified Athletic Trainers from Indiana under the encouragement of William "Pinky" Newell from Purdue University (known as the Father of Athletic Training) saw the need to establish a state association for the purpose of information gathering, creating professional standards and pursuing a state regulation practice act. On May 21, 1984, the Indiana Athletic Trainers' Association (IATA) was incorporated as an association with 106 members. In 1993, Indiana athletic trainers became state regulated (requiring certification) with a state licensing board appointed in 1994 by Governor Evan Bayh III. A bill was later passed in 1998 which changed the language from "certified" to "licensed" athletic trainer. The bill was signed into law by Governor Frank O'Bannon. The membership continued to grow and when the association marked its 30th anniversary year in 2014, the membership had reached over 1,250 members, including a student membership over 400 members.
